These results are in agreement with our previous data, demonstrating that the proliferation is enhanced by treatment of the tumor cells with IFN-γ and TGF-β1, since both tumor and stromal TGFβ1 and IFN-γ production are enhanced in the tumor microenvironment (TME) [@bib0017]. Accumulating evidence suggests that iNOS is highly expressed in many types of cancer cells and suppresses the antitumor immune response [@bib0006], [@bib0011], [@bib0012]. IFN-γ, one of the Th1 cytokines, enhances iNOS activity in human macrophages, murine macrophages, and tumor cells [@bib0015], [@bib0049], [@bib0050]. In the present study, we observed the increase of iNOS expression in the tumor cells with TGF-β1 and IFN-γ treatment (Fig. 5{reftype="fig"}A). TGF-β1 alone enhanced iNOS expression, but not synergistically, in the tumor cells (Fig. 5{reftype="fig"}A). It was reported that iNOS regulates TGF-β1-mediated activation of fibroblasts in the TME, thereby promoting renal fibrosis [@bib0051]. The reduction of iNOS expression by siRNA in MCtreated tumor cells, inhibited the cell proliferation. It suggests the involvement of iNOS-mediated signaling pathway in the cell proliferation. It was shown that tumor cells that were transfected with a dominant negative iNOS and were challenged by IFN-γ, highly expressed iNOS and suppressed the IFN-γ-induced apoptosis of tumor cells [@bib0052]. The MC-induced apoptosis, enhanced by TGF-β1 and IFN-γ
